Living without pain

High-Tone Frequency Therapy

In the human body, high-frequency electromagnetic fields play a natural role in sustaining life and regulating bodily processes. The first therapeutic devices utilizing these fields were developed by German scientists in 1994. They apply complex frequency patterns to improve metabolism, cellular communication, and blood circulation. These frequency patterns are in the high-tone range, i.e., below 20 KHz. Electromagnetic waves support cellular communication through simultaneous biochemical and bioelectrical processes.

The cells are supplied with substances naturally occurring in the body, which eliminates the need for medications. Even cells in tissue deep below the skin are affected because the frequencies can penetrate into the body unimpeded. The frequency patterns used for this therapy do not induce any cellular adaptation and are thus therapeutically effective for the entire duration of treatment. Every organism requires good communication, coordination, and cooperation between its cells. The healing frequencies always reach the source of pain, even deep in the body, as they are passed from cell to cell as in a domino effect. The body can help heal itself.
